Flame is the second full album from the Mary Janes and the first on Flat Earth Records. Fronted by Janas Hoyt, a veteran of the seminal early 90's line-up of the Vulgar Boatmen as well as studio sessions with John Mellencamp, the Mary Janes play honest American music from the heart of the Midwest.

With the 1999 release of their full-length debut, Record No. 1, the band's brand of Amer-indie roots rock prompted critics from Seattle to Austin, Chicago to New York to praise the music as noble, compelling and emotionally afire. Once again, Hoyt delivers a cycle of songs that delve deeply into the heart and soul of a woman who is both struggling with loss and celebrating the redemption of truth.

Opening with the hopeful Junie Moon, 'morning comes, to those who wait', Hoyt later apprises twice of the unspeakable – first in Bruises and Breaks, 'she crept out through the back, with a six-gun on her back' and then again in Subtract the Night 'women cry and women fall, and you might as well be the cause of it all', before closing with a near anthemic version of Tom Petty's Free Girl Now.

With overdriven vocals and pedal steel guitar countering lush string arrangements reminiscent of Cale-era Velvet Underground, the Mary Janes offer a 14 song document which pushes the boundaries of American roots rock.
